ASI's Center for Aging and Policy Studies and the Cornell Population Center Extend their Collaboration

CENTER FOR AGING
AND POLICY STUDIES

The Aging Studies Institute's Center for Aging and Policy Studies has recently awarded funding for three projects to continue the interdisciplinary collaboration and research developed as a result of the Center's prior P30 funding.

The P30 grant from the National Institute on Aging provided support for building collaborative relationships between ASI and the Cornell Population Center. This year Douglas Wolf, PI of the original P30 funding, and Kelly Musick, director of the Cornell Population Center, were able to provide funding for three proposals for faculty involved in this collaboration. The goal of this initiative is to attract new faculty and to advance the partnership between the two institutions.
